PREFACE

IN the last issue of Who's Who in the Theatre, I called attention to the popular fallacy which periodically finds expression in the statement that "the Theatre is dying."

Until the recent outbreak of war, there can have been few who could have seriously taken such a view, or could deny, that far from suffering eclipse, the star of the Theatre has been, during the past few years, very much in the ascendant.

On every hand the swiftly widening influence of the Repertory Theatres and the special Play-producing Societies substantiates this claim. It is true that the modern stage offers us no Garrick, Kean or Irving, no Siddons or Ellen Terry. It has, however, a gallant and enthusiastic band of actors and actresses who conform to a much more consistent standard of efficiency, than was demanded when the former Giants of the stage often took upon themselves the onus of success or failure of a particular production. Acting of smaller parts is on an altogether higher level than was the case some few years since.

New authors constantly arise, the number of plays produced increases steadily, and this extension of activity, it will be readily appreciated, has resulted in a corresponding growth of the already heavy work entailed in the compilation of a volume approaching the comprehensive nature of Who's Who in the Theatre. Notwithstanding the deletions caused through death and non-appearance, once again there will be found in this, the ninth edition, more than four hundred new biographies, British and American; which brings the names in this section to over three thousand. A number of those prominently associated with Ballet have now been included.

Biographical data is generally representative of work recorded to 30th June of this year (although here and there a later reference will be found), and the synopsis of London Playbills has also been included to the same date.

The lists of notable plays produced and long runs have been revised to 2nd Sept., 1939, from which date all theatres were temporarily closed on the outbreak of war, by order of the Government. Incidentally, this is the first occasion since the Great Plague (1665-6), that all theatres have been closed by order of the Authorities, other than for a Royal demise. The Obituary list has been revised to October, and now contains the names of nearly 4500 of those connected with the Theatre of the past. The list of Wills gives the value of over 600 estates, of which details have been published.

An innovation will be found with the introduction of an Index to names of persons still living, or believed to be still living, which have appeared in previous editions but are no longer included by reason of non-appearance over a period of several years.

Death has again taken a heavy toll. Among the names which regrettably disappear from the biographies are Oscar Asche, Laddie Cliff, Karel Capek, John Drinkwater, Sir Johnston Forbes-Robertson, Louie Freear, Herman Finck, Sir Ben Greet, Sir Edward German, William Gillette, Miss Horniman, Sidney Howard, Nelson Keys, Gertrude Kingston, Sir Henry Lytton, Andrew, Fred, and Walter Melville, Luigi Pirandello, Georges Pitoeff, Mary Rorke, Morton Seltén, Sir Guy Standing, Ion Swinley, Ernst Toller, Viola and Lady Tree, Frank Vosper, W. B. Yeats, and many others.

In connection with the biographical section, it should be noted that, by reason of the really overwhelming output of the film industry, the majority of records relating to activities in pictures have been confined to appearances and productions since the issue of the previous edition, and it is only necessary to refer to this, for a complete record to be obtained.

As on previous occasions, my son John has contributed extensively to this portion of the work, in addition to giving invaluable assistance in the reading of proofs. Miss Doris Francis and Mr. S. T. Hyde have also greatly assisted in this respect. Acknowledgments for information supplied are also due to Mr. Paul Dulzell, Secretary of American Actors' Equity Association; Mr. C. B. Purdom, General Secretary of British Actors' Equity; Mr. George Freedley, Librarian of the New York Library, and Mrs. Gabrielle Enthoven.

Once again everything possible has been done to test the accuracy of the facts recorded, and although in a work dealing with so many thousands of names and dates mistakes must inevitably occur, it is confidently believed that these are exceedingly few.

It is my unhappy task as Editor to record the irreparable loss experienced by the death of Dr. J. M. Bulloch, a friend and colleague of over thirty years standing; this book must suffer, too, the sad passing of a very accomplished contributor. I have revised his famous Genealogical Tables, by bringing them up to date, and have reconstructed those dealing with the Irvings, Kembles, Websters and Drews, but I have not added any tables to his wonderful compilation.

October, 1939.

JOHN PARKER.
